The MSc2 Research and Design Studio 'Transdisciplinary Encounters' challenges architectural research and design approaches through extensive collaboration with other disciplines like anthropology, landscape architecture, literature, photography and choreography. The studio combines in-depth reading and reflection, with architectural design and the actual making of a building, architectural object or detail.

In Spring 2021, the studio will investigate how urban places are described and imagined in literature. Which social, material and experiential aspects of architecture has the writer emphasized in the literary description? Parallel to this investigation, we will use a literary perspective to understand an urban site and to develop literary narratives and design proposals. The studio aims to develop representations of urban places in drawings or built architectural fragments, that will be presented by means of an exhibition in Delft.
