Intellectual Property (IP) is property of the student, unless:

- A company is involved with an assignment as part of the curriculum, and they want to acquire the results (IP).
  - Student agrees to transfer the IP to the company and carries out the assignment.
  - Student does not agree with the transfer of the IP and asks the board of examiners of his/her faculty for a substitute assignment.
  - Student agrees with the transfer of the IP and acquires the same rights as an employee on the (possible) prospective earnings from the IP; in case of an internship it is common that the students does not have the same rights.

- The IP is created as part of an assignment within a research group or at a company (for example a bachelor or master internship/graduation project.
